Reflection – Being part of God's story- Rebecca Riggs, Synod Communications Manager.

Usually, when I think about valuing the one, I reflect on the call for me to be more like Jesus (less like me) and to do what I can to help those in need, to speak for those who are silenced or powerless, to protect those who are at risk and to do this in a personal way actually walking through the world with my eyes and my heart open to the individuals around me.

As Jesus reached out to Zacchaeus in the tree and the Samaritan women at the well, speaking and acting with love, I am called to actually connect to and serve people who are not like me, who are not easy to serve, who are not perhaps the 'good guys' in the story. Mostly I do a fair to middling job of this at best, and my failures are quite often because of fear.

Over the weekend, I was retold the story of Joseph of Arimathea, and I thought about the value of the one from another angle. I realised that, of course, I am the one. I am the sheep who does sheep things and finds myself lost, hoping that I can lie down in pastures green for just a bit longer even when the journey that the Shepherd leads me on actually takes me on rocky paths or through the shadows. I am the one who is found and carried back home.....

Over the weekend, I was retold the story of Joseph of Arimathea, and I thought about the value of the one from another angle. I realised that, of course, I am the one. I am the sheep who does sheep things and finds myself lost, hoping that I can lie down in pastures green for just a bit longer even when the journey that the Shepherd leads me on actually takes me on rocky paths or through the shadows. I am the one who is found and carried back home.

And as that one – that very blessed and privileged one – what can I do for God? Joseph is not, in any way, a main character in the story, but he is mentioned in every gospel as he steps into the task of burying Jesus after the crucifixion. He chose to use his privilege and influence to move God's purposes forward – even when it wasn't necessarily safe or easy. He took personal responsibility for the Body of Christ when it was beaten, bloody and broken, when other supporters were turning away and when it didn't look like he was on the 'winning side'. He gave up his family burial place which then became the place of miracle, resurrection and redemption.

There are so many ways for each of us to be part of God's story, and I think most of them will be surprising.

We think especially of Judith Judd, Trish Hair, Philip (Marie's son), Kevin (Trish's son), Im as she gets her medical results, Neville as he gets ready to move south, Bev floating down the Danube, James and Chris who have just celebrated (26th August) their 5th anniversary.

Birthdays this week: Robin Dingle (30th); Clint Ryan (31st)

Please join us for morning tea, after the service, in the hall

This month's Uniting Church focus is:

Let us choose to love our neighbour.

Value the one - Luke 15

As the shepherd searches for the one lost sheep, as Christ sacrificed that each one of us could be saved, so we are called to see the one, to care for the one, to lift those who need our help and to rejoice together when we arrive home.
